

Intervention Journal: Call for papers

Interested in publishing with us?

- Thinking about the MHPSS work you are doing in the field and wondering how to get it out to a wider audience?
- Feeling unsure about how to prepare a manuscript?
- Working on a paper with practical relevance to the field of mental health and psychosocial support?

Whether you are an established author or someone new to writing, we would welcome hearing from you!

We publish field reports, as well as more formal, academic-style papers, and we are also interested in personal reflections from those working in the humanitarian field or with lived experience of a conflict-affected setting as well as commentaries and letters about current topics. We are able to offer support to those who may be publishing for the first time.

This could include writing up project evaluations, formulating lessons learned from a particular approach, documenting the mental health and psychosocial wellbeing of a particular population group – and making this knowledge available to others who work in humanitarian settings elsewhere in the world.

This call for papers has no specific deadline or special subject focus. We simply want to let you know that we are open to new submissions. We have two issues for publication in 2023 – the first in April and the second in October so the sooner you get an article to us, the sooner we can consider it and get it underway.

Take a look at our current issue to see the type of articles we publish

<https://www.interventionjournal.org/>

View our submission guidelines for more information on formatting your manuscript

<http://www.interventionjournal.org/contributors.asp>

Contact Rina Ghafoerkhan, editor in chief for further information or to discuss ideas for articles

r.ghafoerkhan@arg.org